February 2009

Happy Valentine's

This is a fun time of year because we all get the chance to be corny and not get laughed at...well, most of the time. So, here goes...and no laughing! Thanks for being such great tenants! I miss teaching high school, and so it is so fun for me to associate with students again. You are all such a great group and I appreciate that I rarely have to worry about rules being broken. Thanks for making my job fun! There. I'm finished being corny.

Clean Checks

You can thank the girls in apartment #8 for your longer notice for clean checks. I got a little bit of a razzing last month for my short notice. Remember that they are the second week of every month, so that should help make it easier to fit into your schedules. This month I will be around between 3-5 pm on Wednesday, February 11th. And as always, I'll show some love to the apartments that pass. And for those who don't, remember it can affect your cleaning deposit at the end of the year.

To help make cleaning the oven easier, I'm going to pass on a great trick I learned from several of you last month. In fact, I started doing it in my own oven. After you've cleaned the bottom of the oven with an oven cleaner, put some sheets of tin foil down. Then, when food spills, all you have to do is replace the foil. That will make cleaning the oven with cleaner a thing of the past. Yeah!

Glitches Worked Out?

The RA's and I haven't heard much from you lately about the laundry machines or internet, so I'm hoping that means that some of the glitches we were having are worked out. Some of you noticed that a few of the washing machines stopped working halfway through their cycles. We discovered that it was because the circuits were tripping. Dalen did his magic, along with the appliance repair man, and so far I haven't heard anymore complaints. However, if they do get crazy again, let the RA's know. I think we'll always have a few problems with the internet, but Dalen is great to fix them if you let him know. For those of you who lived here last year, you'll probably agree that the internet is working much better this year.

Have an awesome month! As always, if you need anything, let myself or the RA's know. Our contact information is posted on the fridge in every apartment.
